The email or electronic mail is a fabulous gift of the technology that has revolutionized the way we contact people. It has such a profound impact on our life that if it no longer exists, our life would be in a chaotic situation. I would like to thank you for this great topic and here I will talk about an important email that I've recently received.

The email was from the Malaysian airlines that reached my inbox at the beginning of last July, more specifically on 4th July. A few days before that, I travelled to Kuala Lumpur on an official trip and unfortunately, during my return flight, one of my luggage was lost at the (mention the name of the airport in your country) airport. I waited for more than 3 hours and talked to several airport officials as well as two persons from the aviation authority but my luggage was nowhere. I was so frustrated about the event that I sat at the corner of the airport for half an hour blaming myself for the incident though I knew that I had nothing to do about it.

The lost luggage, tragically, had some important documents and my laptop in it, including some gift items I have purchased for my family and a couple of colleagues.

After several attempts throughout the whole week from my side after the incident, I lost all hope and stopped contacting with the airport authority. But on 4th July, almost two weeks later, I received an email from the airport authority that my luggage was found and I could go and claim my luggage any weekday during the office hours.

It could have been just another email sitting innocently on my inbox, but it was not. It carried a piece of great news and I was utterly relieved to receive the email. It was one of the most important emails I have ever received because it was unexpected, literally came at a moment when I was least expecting it. Next morning I went to the airport and received my luggage which was exactly the way I checked in at the Malaysian airport and had everything I packed inside.
